COURSE CONTENT AND PURPOSE

This course will provide the study of techniques leading to the mastery of a keyboard instrument, including physical techniques, practice methods, repertoires, styles and their interpretations, comfort in performance settings, improvisation, and the integration of appropriate concepts from music theory and history. All keyboard students will be exposed to comprehensive solo and chamber music repertory from various cultures of the world in the applied lessons; the studio classes; guest artist, faculty, and student recitals; and master classes.

This course will lead students to music fundamentals, help them how to express music through the knowledge, and prepare them to play their instruments at a level appropriate to a variety of settings such as education, solo performance, and performance in small and large ensembles. In addition, through the reinforcement of techniques, music major students will be able to prepare for the piano proficiency exam and the placement test at 4-year universities.
